

Morning Speech on 5th May 2015.

By Anna CHAN (3B) and Terence HUANG (3B)

Anna & Terence: Good morning Principal, teachers and fellow schoolmates. I'm Terence from 3B. I'm Anna from 3B.

Anna: Today, we are going to talk about a current affair – NEET. Terence, do you know what NEET stands for?

Terence: Of course! It is an abbreviation of “No in Employment, Education or raining”, which means some children who go back and depend on their parents after graduation, for example, asking their parents for looking after them or money to sustain their lives.

Anna: Wow! You are so brilliant! Besides these, what else do you know about NEET?

Terence: I also know that NEET appeared in England originally. But thereafter the same problems have occurred in Japan, Taiwan, China and other countries as well and it has become the global social issue. Anna, do you know why it would happen?

Anna: Yes, I know. Owing to the globalization of technologies, many production processes became computerized. Therefore, it caused the overmuch of manpower resource and thus the degrees of under graduate students were devalued and many young people could not find their ideal jobs so as to depend on their families for living.

Terence: In addition, as the economic development of some developed countries is improving rapidly, the living standard is relatively higher as well. As a result, young people can still survive without hobs by the help of social welfare and their families. Do you know how the problem can be tackled?

Anna: First of all, on personal side, young people should consider their career planning earlier to balance their idealities and daily necessities. Therefore, they won't become the burden of anybody.

Terence: On the government side, I think the government should stabilize the property prices and inflation so as to reduce the living costs of young people and enhance their economy and temperance. Besides, the government can also promote vocational training to enhance the social mobility so that the employment rate of young people can be increased.

Anna & Terence: This is the end of our sharing. Thanks for you guys' attention.
