

May I first ask you a question? Does anyone of you still remember your writing task in primary school with the topic 'My dream'? Some may say no. maybe some of you once wanted to be an astronaut, a pilot, an NBA player or even a magician.

How many of you are now working hard to realise your dream?

I know this is difficult. You need to consider different people such as your parents. Your parents always want you to study more at school. They don't like their child to catch their dream because they think that dream is something unrealistic. So, many people will get lost. They fail to strike a balance about whether to fulfil parents' expectations or to follow their heart. Also, sometimes you need to give in to the real world. You need to work. You need to find a job with good prospects and development as you have to make a living. The majority of you may end up spending too much time at work, and will gradually forget your dream as time goes by.

So, there's no better time to actualise our dream than now. We have to listen to the bottom of our heart to plan our life. We have to understand ourselves better and to set a goal. Once a goal has been set, we should try our best to pave way for achieving our goal.

Why am I talking to you about dreams? Because I think people are not enjoying their life much. They work every day; they study every day. But is that what they really want? If you want to enjoy your life, you need to do what you want to do. If you want to lead a meaningful life, you will be happier as you know that you are living the best of you. I still remember my writing task in primary school. I wanted to be a magician. I started learning tricks through books and other magicians. I practised in front of a mirror to see how my tricks look to the audience and improve my movement. And now, I've become a magician! Do not give up. Nothing happens unless first we dream.
