Obesity is a serious health risk to young people in Hong Kong, according to the Department of Health. A recent survey shows that 10% of those aged between 10 and 18 are overweight.

Young people’s favourite snacks are usually high in calories and low in nutrients. These snacks are harmful for their growing bodies.

‘I recommend they eat small, natural snacks instead. They should also watch their diet and exercise more often,’ said Dr Anthony Cheng, the department’s spokesperson for family health.

Dr Cheng added that obesity causes problems not only in teenagers’ social lives, it also leads to heart disease and breathing troubles. Finally, try to eat less fat.

Text 2

This year in May, I went with a lot of people to Cheung Chau to celebrate the Bun Festival. The most colourful event of the festival was the procession. I enjoyed watching the dragon and lion dances very much. Children were keen on joining the procession because they could wear colourful costumes and ‘float’ in the air! Musicians beat gongs and drums in the streets to scare the evil spirits away.

At midnight, the bun-snatching race began. Twelve competitors climbed up a tower to snatch buns. According to tradition, the more buns they snatch, the better fortune they will bring to their family.

I recommend that you go next year!

Text 3

At first sight, Stanley Cheung is an ordinary student. He is of medium height and wears glasses, but his appearance is actually different. After a terrible hill fire in Pat Sin Leng, he lost eight fingers and has burn marks on his face. However, he did not give up. He studied hard and successfully graduated from San Francisco University in 2008. It wasn’t easy. He had to give double the time and make double the effort. In the interview, Stanley shares his study tips and future plans with us. ‘I’ll become a social worker. I’m going to use my knowledge to help others.’ Stanley is now studying for a master’s degree.
