His name was Chan Ho Chun, but most people knew him affectionately as 'Uncle Chan'. To me, though, he was always Grandpa.

For 65 years, my grandfather woke up at dawn to get ready for work. While he was gathering his tools, my grandmother was lovingly cooking him breakfast. After breakfast, he would hurry to catch the tram to Central and quickly set up his stall. While they were walking to work, businessmen stopped to see him. They would queue patiently just to spend a few minutes with him because he always brightened up their day.

For most of its history, Hong Kong was just a small seaport. Nowadays, it is a thriving economic centre. However, it is not always good for many of our traditional trades.

Most traditional jobs do not make much money, so most young people prefer not to do them. Therefore, these trades are slowly disappearing. The government is not helping much either. Heavy fines apply for working as a street hawker without a licence. Hawkers cannot afford the fines, and as a result, many retire.

I have lived in Parkview Estate for six months and I am concerned about the environmental problems in my neighbourhood.

When I walk around my neighbourhood, I see people throwing rubbish out of their windows, and there are air conditioners dripping water. My grandmother has recently slipped on a pool of water on the ground and hurt herself.

Many residents leave their polystyrene lunch boxes in the alley, sometimes with leftover food inside. I have seen rats and cockroaches crawling around the containers. This can spread disease.

Have you ever wondered what happens to your rubbish after you have thrown it away? Most rubbish goes to the three landfills in Hong Kong. The landfills will be full by 2015. Soon, we will have no space left for our rubbish.

There are several things we can do to reduce waste. Always take your own shopping bag when you go shopping. Choose goods with less packaging. Before you buy something, always ask yourself, 'Do I really need it?' Use rechargeable batteries. Also, put old newspapers, scrap paper, plastic bottles and soft drink cans in recycling bins.
